SEEK FOREIGNER IN THE BAFFLING BECHTEL CRIME

Suspect, Wild-Eyed Man, Said to Have Boarded Train in Philadelphia

THE HOUSE IS SEARCHED

Assitant Director Theodore
Wood is To Investigate

By David P. Sentner

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 22.—(INS)—A wild-eyed swarthy man of foreign extraction was sought today by police for questioning in connection with the maniacal knife murder of Norman Bechtel, model young church worker.

The suspect boarded an early morning train at a station close to the spot where the abandoned blood-marked automobile of Bechtel was found abandoned.

Passengers described the man as appearing excited and his clothes soiled and rumpled as if he had been in a struggle.

The murder machine was left outside a deserted house on 32nd and Pearl streets five miles from the lonely road in Germantown where Bechtel was slain at midnight.

There is a Pennsylvania railroad station a few blocks away at 32nd and Market streets and a regular train stop scheduled for about one a. m.

Apparently the murderer knew this section and carefully planned his getaway.

Detectives searched the empty house following reports that a strange looking "hobo" had made it his headquarters for the past few weeks.

There was indisputable evidence that the empty building had been occupied recently. There were remains of a food supply, garments and letters. There were numerous foreign newspapers and a postcard from Germany in a bundle.

It was recalled that "3-X," the madman murderer of New York, was of foreign extraction. A newspaper containing a recent letter from "3-X" was found yesterday in the deserted house with a blood-stained cloth. The Bechtel crime resembled in general technique the slayings of "3-X" in New York.

The investigation into "the murder without a clue," today also turned toward the will and insurance policies of the model young bachelor.

Bechtel, although only earning $100 a week in an insurance company, is said to have carried $50,000 in life insurance.

Another development was the virtual taking of the case out of the hands of the detective bureau by Public Safety Director Kern Dodge, who appointed Assistant Director Theodore Wood to conduct his own investigation.

"I want this case solved," said Moore. "I have asked Mr. Wood, a detective with years of experience, to make his own investigation of this baffling case. I do this to put the case in the most experienced hands."

A diary found in the home of Bechtel failed to reveal the hoped-for information as to his private life.

Examination by fingerprint experts was completed of the automobile in which Bechtel left Eleanor Temple, his pretty fellow church worker, twenty-five minutes before he was found dying. No fingerprints were revealed.

While the theory that the crime was a "hex murder" was discredited by police, nevertheless, the peculiar nature of the numerous knife wounds on Bechtel's face and body caused authorities to be puzzled.

"It looks as if the slayer carved out the figure as deliberately as if he was working on ivory," said William Condon, superintendent of the morgue.

Pawn shops were warned to watch for the wallet and watch of Bechtel which were taken by the slayer. However, $17 in the victim's coat pocket was left untouched.

OHIO ENDORSES HOOVER

Washington, D. C., Jan. 22.—President Hoover's campaign for renomination and re-election was regarded as formally launched today. Action by the Ohio State Republican Committee in endorsing President Hoover and giving him a free hand in the selection of convention delegates is the first of a series of such moves in important states. Other states where party organization is well in control, are expected to follow suit. Unless there is an unexpected uprising in some quarters, President Hoover will win the renomination by default.

JUDD TRIAL

Phoenix, Arizona, Jan. 22.—Winnie Ruth Judd, frail daughter of an Indiana preacher, was tainted today as a woman whose fury drove her to kill her best friends, mutilate their bodies and later attempt to conceal her crime by shipping their bodies in trunks. Winsome Winnie of the desert cocktail party, now pale and drawn, faced the second day of the trial. As she went to court today before a jury of middle-aged farmers and working men, Mrs. Judd stood without flinching while ten state witnesses on the opening day pointed accusing fingers at her.

Norristown, Jan. 22.—"The unwritten law," believed to be the basis of defense planned for Edward H. B. Allen, Main Line society turfman, accused of slaying his sister's sweet-heart, will be contested vigorously by the prosecution, it was indicated here today. Young Allen goes on trial February 1, 1932, in Montgomery Court for the killing of Francis A. Donaldson, 3d, on the night of November 9th last in the Allen apartment at the fashionable Green Hill Farms Hotel, Overbrook. District Attorney Nace of Lansdale yesterday indicated the Commonwealth's stand in regard to the "unwritten law" angle when he declared "anyone familiar with the case knows there was no seduction involved."

MURDER SUSPECTS ARE HELD UNTIL TUESDAY

Bristol Quartet Pleads "Not Guilty" at Preliminary Hearing in New York

ARE NOT IDENTIFIED

The two men and two women from here who were arrested late Wednesday in connection with a murder mystery in Brooklyn were given preliminary hearings yesterday in 6th District Police Court, that city.

The four:
John Marchetti, 19, 201 New Brook street.

Samuel Lasparella, 26, 1038 Trenton avenue.

Mary Lasparella, 21, 1038 Trenton avenue.

Theresa Zanzli, 26, 890 Flushing avenue, New York. A former resident here.

All of the four pleaded "not guilty" and were held for further hearing next Tuesday.

Liborio Ladato, 955 Pond street, accompanied by Chief Jones and Detective Russo, saw the 12 men and women taken into custody by New York police in connection with two murders there. Ladato could not identify any of those under arrest as resembling the two men who held him up in his drug store, here, January 9th.

None of the prisoners were questioned by the Bristol authorities but Samuel Lasparella did talk for a while with Chief Jones.

The four are being held in connection with the murder of James Dowling, grocery-store manager, who was slain in a hold-up. The murderers of Dowling obtained $12 from the store.

BIRDS ON RIVER

By "THE STROLLER"

Dear Stroller:

Will you write an article about the large birds flying and floating in and around the river, hundreds of them. They are quite tame. Have heard they were crows, sea gulls, wild ducks and wild geese. Please set us right. Thanking you,

JOHN BROWN SMITH.

We have made extensive inquiries about the birds referred to, above and have consulted those who are well versed in bird life.

Ralph Ratcliffe, president of Fish & Game Protective Association, informs us that he believes the birds seen are sea gulls and crows.

The crows have frequented these parts recently by the hundreds. They congregate along the river where they feed upon that which is eatable and which is washed ashore by the rise and fall of the tide.

Crows never land on the water but are seen very close to the water's edge and along the damp shore line.

The sea gulls swim and float about on the water and are also to be seen in great numbers. They are conspicuous by their white markings.

There are some ducks to be seen on the river at times, but it is the consensus of opinion that the birds referred to by Mr. Smith are either sea gulls or crows.

ARMAND V. MORRIS AGAIN HEAD OF FREE LIBRARY

Institution Showed Steady Growth During Last Year

CIRCULATION INCREASE

Decided Increase in Use of Books of Non-Fiction
Character

Annual meeting of the shareholders of the Bristol Free Library was held last night at which time officers were chosen, committees named and annual reports read.

Armand V. Morris was chosen president, and Miss Mary W. Swain, secretary and treasurer.

Committees:

Book—Miss Margaret R. Grundy, H. W. Moore and Arthur P. Brady.

Library—Miss J. Hill, Mrs. Grace S. Williams, Carl Wenzel.

Finance—Clifford L. Anderson, L. C. Spring, Dr. William C. LeCompte.

Annual report of Armand V. Morris, president, was submitted as follows: "Your Board of Managers has the following report to make on the Library for the year 1931 which is the 16th year of its operation since the reorganization in 1915.

"During the past year the library has maintained the steady growth it has shown for a number of years past as evidenced by the total circulation which has increased from 25,000 in 1930 to 36,282 in 1931. This increase of between three and four per cent may seem insignificant but on the other hand we are nearly at the point where we will have all the circulation which can be taken care of without materially increasing our facilities.

"It is gratifying to note in this connection a very decided increase in the use of the non-fiction class of books for both juveniles and adults, and the book committee is to be commended for its encouragement of this class of readers by its wise selection of new books.

"There were 601 new readers' cards issued during the year which we believe is an excellent showing under present business conditions and indicates that the library is steadily extending its sphere of usefulness in our community. Altogether a total of 3,671 cards have been issued during the past 16 years, a record which compares very favorably with libraries in other towns of approximately the same size.

"The reading room has been used by 2700 persons during the year past, which is a slight decrease from the figure for 1930 and is due to the necessity for closing the children's reading room to provide shelving space. The closing of the children's room has been partially compensated for by permitting the older children to use the adult reading room and thus for this has been attended with satisfactory results.

The eleven representative periodicals to which the Library subscribes, are all in constant use in the reading room, and as a new number is received the old number becomes available for home readers. The librarian reports that these home readers are rapidly increasing. A list of the periodicals subscribed for may be of interest and is as follows:

During the past year 900 new books have been purchased under the supervision of the Book Committee, approximately 50% of these for the younger readers. The trend toward the more solid class of books has been referred to earlier in the report. The number and quality of new books purchased is truly remarkable considering the size of the appropriation for that purpose.

One hundred books have been added by gift and the Board desires to express at this time, its appreciation of the generosity of the donors. Altogether on the shelves and in circulation there is a total of 13,496 books now belonging to the Library; approximately one book for each inhabitant of the town.

It is the aim of the Librarian to segregate the various classes of literature as far as possible in book cases or section. At present, sections for modern poetry and modern plays are in process of formation, but it is not yet certain whether this rearrangement will require new shelving and cases.

The amount received from fines on overdue books in 1931 was $296.53 and it is a rather curious fact that this is a smaller amount than received in 1930 when the circulation was less than in 1931. Probably the stress that most of us are experiencing has made our readers more careful of the penalties.

The wearing out of books has been a serious problem to both the Book and Library Committees and we are glad to report that an experiment is underway with a number of books which have been rebound at slight ex-

SAFEGUARDS

The average citizen is ignorant of the elaborate precautions taken by the public health service to protect him from communicable disease both at home and while traveling. It is commonly known that quarantines are maintained, and water sources treated, but beyond that the citizenry knows little of the work of local, state and federal health agencies.

Careful guard is kept to protect the health of travelers and to control the spread of disease from one community to another and from one state to another. This requires organization and care.

Railroad and steamship companies would be unable to afford the health protection, which they desire that their patrons should enjoy, unless they received the cooperation and expert knowledge of the public health service.

Common carriers operate under strict regulations for sanitary reasons. Their water supply is tested frequently. Foodstuffs sold in their dining rooms and cars are inspected, and the men and women who handle that food must submit to medical examinations. The quarantines enforced on all steamships in international transit are well known, but it is not so well known that railroad yards in which passenger coaches are cleaned and replenished are under strict sanitary supervision.

These facts help to explain why communicable disease is seldom carried from one community to another by the traveling public.

MOMENTUM

As the pig iron furnaces and steel mills run so goes business generally, according to an axiom. Right now these barometers of business foretell better business and less unemployment next spring.

Pig iron and steel are the raw materials for a vast number of major manufactured products, chief among which are automobiles, railway equipment, bridges, buildings, hardware and household articles. The iron and steel being made this month will soon find their way to innumerable factories. Therefore any increase in iron and steel production today is the forerunner of increased industrial and structural activity generally.

Increasing production at the furnaces is exactly what has taken place this month. As for the steel mills, their output is the highest since last fall.

On the basis of these infallible omens there is more than blind optimism behind the prosperity predictions now being heard on all sides.

That army of unemployed will be greatly decimated by the resumption of construction in the spring and by the seasonal employment that will be afforded by agriculture and allied enterprises. Within a few weeks that vast public and private construction program outlined for President Hoover in December will be in full motion.

Even the cynic believes in love, but he lavishes all of it on himself.

The really uncomfortable phase of running into debt is running into creditors.

The Good Old Days were ones in which the town belle bit her lips to keep them rosy.

Hurry Up---Congress!

SYNOPSIS

In the Mexican desert, a masked rider, his gun still warm, hides in the sheltering mesquite as the cavalry rides past. They stop beside the prostrate figure of a man. "Lopez!" they exclaim, and a shiver runs through the group. A jeering laugh bursts down from above, and gazing up they see the masked rider outlined against the sky. Across the border, tall and handsome Ted Radcliffe arrives at Verdi Junction. He is met by a pretty girl who drives him to the home of his friend, Bob Harkness. She leaves without giving her name. While waiting for Bob, Ted goes riding. He rescues a boy being beaten by two Mexicans in Paco Morales' employ. They threaten him with the vengeance of their leader, Jito. Later Ted meets his girl acquaintance of the morning at a dinner given by Major Blount of the U. S. Army. She is Adela Morales, niece of Paco Morales, the man of power in Mexico. All eyes turn to Morales when El Coyote, the bandit, is mentioned.

CHAPTER VI

"El Coyote, yes. His chief amusement lies in robbing me. You will hear much of El Coyote, señor. The bandit most famous of the southwest border. Also he does me the honor to be my personal enemy, although I have never seen him. But his raids are almost always against me. Not too freely do men speak of him, señor, for no one knows who are his friends."

"He has friends?"
"Friends? Of a surety. Friends and followers—perhaps powerful ones. He would create a legend, this El Coyote, that he is the protector of the poor and that he steals only from the rich. Bueno! It is an empty gesture, to refrain from plundering paupers, no?"

"Is he American or Mexican?"
"We do not surely know, although I am certain he is American."
Blount's laugh boomed from the lower end of the table. "Morales won't ever admit the possibility that this border thief is one of his Mexican cousins."

The Spaniard raised his hands in a wide gesture. "I am sure he is not. His ways, they are not Latin ways. He has, if you will pardon me, the sudden brutality of the American bad man."

"Has no one ever seen him?"
"Not without his mask, señor. No one, that is, who has lived. We know he rides a white horse and that he carries two automatics at his side. He is one of those rare men who shoot equally well with right hand or left. But all that is what you call hearsay."

Radcliffe leaned forward. "Tell me more about him."

Morales smiled in quiet amusement. "You love adventure, no? Bueno! This El Coyote has gathered a band, and they live somewhere out toward the foothills in Mexico. From there they swoop down on the ranches, plundering them of cattle and sometimes of gold. In two years this bandit king has cost me many thousands of pesos and the lives of six men. To me it has been an expensive form of entertainment, and the end—quien sabe? The Mexican cavalry have hunted him, but they are not fuerte—not vigorous. Almost I think they do not want to catch him. Partly they are afraid, and partly do they sympathize."

"Sometimes I sympathize with him myself," murmured the major's wife.

The Spaniard inclined his head. "It is the privilege of your charming sex to be sentimental, señora. But it is not a gift that makes good soldiers. Myself, I have no sympathy. Five thousand pesos I have offered for him, dead or alive. I have promised a thousand pesos for information alone. Listen. I will tell you one little story that happened only last night, and then, señor, you can decide whether we have here a real bandit or not. Just before dawn this morning has it taken place, and the soldiers are still keeping it secret, but I shall tell you."

For a moment Morales regarded the silent group in the candlelight. Then again his thin lips moved. "Two nights ago Lopez, a Mexican rider, offered to guide the soldiers to where El Coyote's camp lay. By chance or treachery the bandits had already learned of their coming and fled. The soldiers got nothing but a few abandoned horses, some blankets and embers of campfire. But they learned something of the bandit's habits. Things that may be of value. Bueno! In any case Lopez had earned his reward."

"Yesterday a little boy came bearing a note to Lopez. A folded paper some stranger had given him in the road, and the paper said in Spanish that before the full moon died Lopez himself would die."

The Spaniard ceased and played idly with a few crumbs that lay before him. "Last night, under cover of darkness, Lopez came to my hacienda. He was leaving, he told me. He trembled. Dios, how frightened he was! There could be no safety for him in all the borderland. I gave him his thousand pesos in American gold." Again the Spaniard stopped, as if sunk in reverie.

"Well," asked the major at last, "What happened?"

"Nothing very important." Before dawn this Lopez is found in the Verdi road, a bullet through his throat and the bag of gold cut open. A few coins lay scattered over the man, as if in contempt. A gesture, no?"

He turned toward Radcliffe. "Such is our bandit. He has terrorized this land too long, and until the troops of your country will help our Mexican soldiers, I fear we will never get him. But I have good friends in Washington. Each day I am expecting word that Major Blount's cavalry will help drive out this thief and killer."

Across the table from Radcliffe a heavy, red-faced man of fifty was listening intently. He had been introduced as Dr. Price, and in the pause that followed he raised his voice. A singularly pleasant voice, it seemed to Radcliffe, with just a trace of southern drawl. "I could never see why our troops should come into the picture, Morales," he began. "This Coyote is a bandit, technically, and deeds like last night's have an ugly sound. But everybody who knows the border country will admit that if it weren't for El Coyote the little ranchers about here would have been gobbled up slick and clean by you big fellows long ago. You would own the whole border world. As it is, this bandit, if you want to call him that, has so far kept the big fish from eating the little ones."

Morales showed no slightest sign of irritation. "Bueno. But perhaps the big fish believe that for the good of the border country it would do no harm if these little fish were eaten up. Today is the day of efficient things, no? You Americans have taught us that. And it is not efficient for every hundred acres of land to have a ranchhouse and family when I can control half a million acres without all the waste of money that these little ranchers bring. Si, long ago they would have been driven out had it not been for this El Coyote protector of theirs. This country is for great herds of cattle. It has been that since first my ancestors took it from the Indian. It is not meant to be cut up into silly farms and straggling villages. It is a country for the few and the strong."

The major had risen. His wife whispered to Radcliffe, "The time for that big speech has come."

Impressively the major coughed. "I have some interesting information for all of you," he began importantly. "It is in regard to this bandit. Señor Morales, you have long wanted the use of my cavalry in running down El Coyote. I'll admit that nothing could have given my boys more pleasure than a little bandit hunting, but that wasn't our job until we got orders to go ahead. Well, you'll be glad to know this afternoon I received telegraphic instructions from Washington to take the field until El Coyote is either killed or driven from the country. I promise you that in one month we will have him."

A gleam of intense pleasure, a kind of animal ferocity, flared for a moment in Morales' eyes. His hands made the motion of applause. "Bueno, bueno! That means battle. It means—" He stopped, and, following his eyes, Radcliffe saw a figure standing in the doorway.

The major's wife touched her guest's arm.

"Don Bob," she said.

Outlined against the dim light of the farther room stood an erect, slender figure in evening clothes. To Radcliffe's watching eyes there was an immense air of repose about the man, a sense of quiet confidence, coupled, just how Radcliffe couldn't say, with a great alertness. His temples were graying. His eyes moved steadily from one face to another. Quietly the man moved to his hostess's chair.

"So sorry to be late." And the voice, when he spoke, was in harmony with the impression he evoked. Clear and eager, and behind it lay that same assurance and confidence his quiet eyes spoke of.

The major waved him toward a seat, but Don Bob had already seen Radcliffe and stepped forward. Unhesitatingly he grasped the younger man's hand.

"It's good to see you, Ted." With a swift glance he appraised the straight, strong body and nodded in silent approval. "I'd hate to try lifting you on my shoulder now, Ted. The years have done well by you. You—yes, you look like your father, but so much bigger." Again he laid a hand on Radcliffe's shoulder, then passed to his seat.

"There's a separate portion of Hell reserved for late dinner guests," Aunt Clara scolded, as the man took his place at her left.

"Hell enough to know I've missed at least two courses of the best dinner in Verdi. Dreadfully sorry. I made the last three miles from the ranch in ten minutes over that broken-down cow trail." Don Bob raised his eyes to the major. "But what was that impassioned speech I interrupted?"

And Blount, ever eager to pass on his moral of news, replied, "The United States government, which in my small capacity I serve, is tired of El Coyote's playfulness. Tomorrow the cavalry, and I take the field in Mexico."

Don Bob's eyebrows raised. "How can you go hunting there?"

"We'll ask permission from the Mexican authorities to hunt the bandit wherever he goes."

Confidently Morales added: "The Mexican cavalry will give whatever you ask. I can answer for that." With a gesture of dismissal the Spaniard turned toward Don Bob. "Important news, eh, Don Bob?"

Will You Help Those who are Willing to Work?

A number of men, women and girls of various vocations, who are willing to work but cannot find employment, have registered with the Bristol Unemployment Bureau.

Many of these have dependents and are the heads of families who find themselves in stringent circumstances during this time of depression.

A list of all such persons is available to those desiring the services of such a person or persons, regardless of the length of time for which such employment might be offered.

You are asked to make some sacrifice. Do your share by providing work for one or several days at your home or place of business.

If those who are able will give employment to these folks and thus aid them to earn that which they need, they will be accomplishing a two-fold purpose.

STATE NEWS

WASHINGTON.—Football players are popularly supposed to pack considerable brawn, but at Washington and Jefferson College here they carry a high percentage of brain.

So, at least, said Dr. Ralph C. Hutchinson, new president, in an address to the Pittsburgh alumni group.

Scholastic averages of graders at the presidents school, Dr. Hutchinson said, are higher than those of other students.

"If football produces such scholars as those at W. and J.," he said, "why, I'm for football more than ever."

EASTON.—The sword which the Marquis de Lafayette carried when he sailed for America to aid George Washington in the Revolutionary War came into the permanent possession of Lafayette College here as the gift of the Baroness Von Miltitz.

Two letters, one written by the great uncle of the Baroness to Marquis de Lafayette inquiring whether the sword was his and the affirmative reply of the noted soldier accompanied the gift.

The sword came into possession of the Miltitz family in 1792 and was retained by successive generations. Gift of the historical sword to Lafayette College was an outgrowth of the friendship which the Baron Karl von Priesen Miltitz, father of the Baroness, held for Gideon Boerick, of Wynnewood, a trustee of the college.

PITTSBURGH.—Poverty will be abolished within a decade.

That's the belief of Francis McGuire, disciple of Henry George, famed single-taxer, who retired here after serving the Henry George Club as librarian for more than a score of years.

McGuire, born here in 1852, has advocated Georgian principle here and in Chicago.

PITTSBURGH.—The rear wall of an apartment building is no place for target practice, according to North Side police.

Three men who attempted the practice landed in jail after a bullet went wild and crashed through a window.

NEW SHOES SEEN IN BRONZE AND TAUPE; ALSO IN CHARTREUSE

Some Grey and An Unusual Model of Mahogany Red Likewise Used

By Alice Langeier
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
PARIS, Jan. 22.—Holiday shoes are sober but smart.

Chic booties in the French capital favor chocolate-brown and taupe, with some fawn shades, for pretty winter feet. Dark brown is used alone or accentuated by a light color such as chartreuse.

Costa is continuing the bronze shade which is so popular in Patou's collection this year. There are also some grey and an unusual model of mahogany-red.

For daytime wear there is a strong preference for kid with some lizard and snakeskin. Antelope is also used and some patent leather for entire shoes or trimmings. There is also a conder akin with honeycomb pattern in faint relief and frosted surface. Box-calf is the favorite for sports shoes.

For evening Perugia is showing elaborate slippers entirely in gold and there is a new gold material in a kind of chain-mail effect which lends itself to the making of lovely evening shoes. Crepe de chine and satin are also in evidence after dark and there is a new gilt kid called Sun-gold, which is greener than the former kid and said to be impervious to dyes so that it can be used as trimming on white slippers.

A very open-work silver kid is used for evening in the sandal form which is more open than ever, it seems, sometimes with the lines of straps not only encircling the ankle, but passing between the toes and reminding one of the antique foot-sandal.

"Tyrolian Topper" is One of Newest Tilted Modes for Spring

By Alice Langeier
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

PARIS.—The straws that will shine in the spring—tra-la—will have the same shallow crowns that have been seen on the popular little Empress Eugene bonnets this year.

Small cap-fitting models introduce a new straw conveying a mother-of-pearl opalescence in a fairly thick clip variety. This spring hat is most attractive in white and the palest shade of pink, as the pearly facets

Hostess Pajamas

Following the dictates of fashion, these hostess pajamas, worn by Ruth Weston, noted screen player, are modeled so that they convey the evening gown effect. They are of black satin with the latest graceful scarf neck. A rhinestone buckle on the satin belt relieves the monotony of the all-black suit.

gleam and glow under the light. It also looks important posed round up-turned brims surrounding cap fittings of the softest felt.

Two other straws will be shining in the spring lime-light, one a flat opaque chip that looks somewhat like frosted glass, and another resembling the regular all-over eyelet English embroidery.

In royal-blue, the former straw conveys a kind of stained-glass effect by introducing a ribbon and bow formed of thick wools plaited in bright colors. They are passed round the crown flaps pressed close to the head.

and tied on one side or the other.

Right or left? This is going to be the all-important question in millinery modes next Spring. The angles new hats take convey extreme and moderate tilts. The side-saucer tilt usually goes up on the right. An up-at-the-back and down-in-front line defines one of the latest moods in brimmed bonnets.

The "Tyrolian Topper" is one of the very newest tilted modes, with a flat back and the square bit of front brim shaped into position from high side

GAELS WIN SECOND CONSECUTIVE VICTORY

Defeating the Celtics, 30-21, the Gaels won their second consecutive victory of the second half of the A. O. H. league last night on the Hibernians' floor and thereby took undisputed possession of first place in the league standing. In the other set of the night, the Columbians won their first game of the second half defeating the Shamrocks, 35-33.

"Andy" McCafferty was high scorer of the Gaels-Celtics affair, hitting the cords for five field goals and a foul for a total of eleven points. J. Mulligan played a stellar game on the defense. Lake and Kervick were the stars for the losers.

Fifteen points by Dave Ennis and nine by "Marty" Fallon enabled the Columbians to chalk up their win over the Shamrocks who put up a stiff battle and seemed like certain winners over the hard-luck team of the A. O. H. league. Dougherty kept the losers in the game throughout by scoring eleven points.

NEWS BRIEFS

ESCAPE POLICE

Camden, N. J., Jan. 22.—Four men in a stolen machine escaped police pursuit on three separate occasions in South Jersey early today. The men were sighted first while in the act of robbing Boyd's drug store at Delanco, N. J. Police surprised them and they gave chase but they escaped. They circled back later to Riverside, N. J., and there tried to force entry into a second store. They were surprised by police for a second time and once again eluded pursuit in a winding chase through the streets of Riverside. Speeding through this city they stopped at a gasoline station on Crescent Boulevard, asked the attendant to put 15 gallons of gasoline and two quarts of oil in the car and then drove off, waving to the station attendant, whom they did not pay. The attendant took the license number of the car and reported same to the police.

JAPANESE FLEET READY

Shanghai, Jan. 22.—The Japanese fleet stood ready today to go into immediate action against the Chinese of this city, while police took utmost precaution to prevent further serious rioting between the Chinese and Japanese. The situation was by no means calm. Rear Admiral Koichi Shirasawa, Commander of the Japanese fleet in Chinese waters, said if the Chinese did not make amends for damage to Japanese lives and property, he would be forced to act.

PITTSBURGH.—Seventeen river men came ashore here, singing lustily, went a-rolling up the street.

A landlubber policeman looked, decided the rolling walk wasn't due entirely to the bounding main, and arrested the group.

Arraigned before Magistrate Leo Rothenberg in central police court, the group was dismissed with the injunction:

"Hereafter you stick to water." The magistrate retained the remains of six bottles of hair tonic of high alcoholic content.

Armand V. Morris Again Heads the Free Library

pense and so far with very encouraging results. A popular book becomes unsightly due to handling in a comparatively short time and unless rebound, has to be replaced; we are therefore following the rebounding experiment with much interest, in order to keep our replacement outlay at a minimum.

Our finance committee has functioned very ably during the past year, but it is still handicapped by the reluctance of the vast majority of our readers to render any financial support. The great bulk of our income is still derived from the contributions of a very small group of public spirited citizens. It is sincerely to be hoped that a way will yet be found to interest a greater number of our people in the financial support of an institution which we believe has more than demonstrated its value to the community. Especially it should be remembered that it is the needs of the younger generation as well as of the adults which have to be taken care of.

It was hoped that during the past year a plan could be worked out by which the reading room of the Library could be open for a few hours on Sunday to meet a need which it was felt might exist among those of our population who live in boarding houses. So far we have not been able to arrange for this but it is recommended to the new Board that the matter be given further thought and if possible a trial made.

During the year the furniture and fixtures of the Library have been maintained in excellent condition under the supervision of your Library Committee.

The Board desires to express its appreciation for the continued free use of the Library building tendered by Mr. Joseph R. Grundy. The Library is fortunate indeed not to have rent or carrying charges to pay out of its slender income. Details of the income and expenses are given in the report of our efficient Treasurer.

The thanks of the Board are due to the Librarian and her assistants for the able manner in which the work of the Library has been carried on during the year.

All of the above is respectfully submitted.
ARMAND V. MORRIS,
President.
January 21st, 1932.

Mack, at 70, Looks Ahead

By HARDIN BURNLEY

HOW WILL THE ATHLETICS FARE IN 1932?
Walter JOHNSON (right)—INSISTS THAT THIS WILL BE WASHINGTON'S YEAR—BUT, THEN, —Connie MACK—WANTS ANOTHER FLAG

IF THE YANKS' NEW INFELDERS MAKE GOOD, N.Y. WILL BE HARD TO BEAT

CONNIE IS ENTERING HIS 70TH YEAR.

WITH three decades of big-league piloting in back of him, Connie Mack, now in his seventieth year, faces one of his toughest seasons.

According to all hot stove league reckonings, the old fox won't have any walkaway race with his Philadelphia Athletics in the American League grind next year. The Yankees, his bitterest rivals, have been enormously strengthened by this winter's acquisitions from the minor leagues. The Washington Senators can be counted upon to be also up there fighting all the way. And Chicago and Cleveland both will show plenty of winning ball-playing, according to Mack himself.

With Frank Crosetti of the Coast leagues, and other Pacific slope stars on the New York roster, the canny Connie expects the Yankee team to give his stellar aggregation stiff opposition throughout the race.

Of course, the silver-haired Quaker City manager is confident that his boys will win out in the end, but he isn't discounting the chances of the other teams. Mack has never been a braggart. Of the Yankees he says: "They were so good at the end of last season that if the race had gone another month there might have been a much closer finish. They will be chock-full of pep next year. They are well handled and will have better pitching this season than in 1931."

Connie laughs when you ask him if he will retire after reaching the age of seventy. He declares in no uncertain terms that he will never turn over the reins of his ball club until he is of no use to the outfit.

"It's the game that keeps me young," is his way of putting it. Connie would laugh even louder if you were to tell him that Washington and New York have counted his pennant-winning team out of their 1932 calculations and are watching each other. It is no secret that the consensus of opinion among the Yankees and Senators is that the Athletics are washed up and that some of the best Quaker City players will be traded.

The old fox has good license to snicker. Years and years ago the word went around that Mack was out of the big money. That was after he had sold players like "Home-Run" Baker and "Stuffy" McInnis. But Connie fooled them by building up the great machine that carried off three pennants and two World's Series in succession.

There is no doubt that the old catcher is as wily-witted a pilot as ever ran a big league ball team. He knows human psychology and he knows the national game. In other words, he not only can tell a great player when he sees one, but he also can get everything possible out of his men.

"Ever since I came on this circuit," said one veteran American Leaguer, "I've been hearing that Connie Mack was finished as a first-class manager. I've never really believed it and I don't believe it now. Mack will never be finished as a first-rate diamond boss until he can't get down to the ball field at all."

At sixty-nine the old fox of baseball is far too spry for anything like that!
